"Margo Rabb has created a character that truly captures the chaotic nature of teenager life and the realization that life must go on."

Cures for Heartbreak

_by Margo Rabb_

013743  $17.05

Random House

Reading Level: 6  Interest Level: 9-12  Classification: Fiction

Fifteen-year-old Mia Pearlman’s life goes from boring and normal to out-of-control and tragic when her mother dies, just twelve days after being diagnosed with cancer. Mia, her older sister Alex, and their father aren’t sure how to deal with one another, their grief and anger, or their different ways to go through the grieving process. Alex and Mia are constantly at one another’s throat without their mother to intervene and their father has become a shell of a man.

Life gets even more complicated when Mr. Pearlman suffers a heart attack and undergoes bypass surgery. Mia and Alex are left to their own devices to get through daily life and in the midst of all of the tragedy, Mia deals with all of life’s teenage issues as well, complete with school, friends, crushes, lipstick, and shopping.

Mia is honest about her parents and their family. The marriage had not been the best and the fighting was constant. Her father is boring and out of touch, barely existing. Her sister is a constant nag and Mia, herself, is a complete mess. Her one dating experience ends up being a pity date, and the fake eyelashes she wears to catch the heart doctor’s attention keep falling off.

When Alex leaves for college and Mr. Pearlman begins dating Sylvia, Mia is left unsure of everything in her life. Sylvia is the complete opposite of Mrs. Pearlman and she and her tarot cards and collectibles quickly become a part of the family, regardless of Mia’s opinion of the situation.

Through friends, family, journaling, therapy, and time, Mia starts to sort through her emotions and grief and begins to see hope and love returning to her life. She discovers that while grief may always be in her life, love has a permanent place as well.

When a novel begins with a death of a beloved parent, you might expect a dreary tone, but sarcasm and humor help Mia find her path to healing her heart. While the language is sometimes harsh, it’s in line with how most teenagers would speak and helps keep the characters believable. Told in short, first-person chapters and based on the author’s true experience of losing both of her parents while still young, Margo Rabb has created a character that truly captures the chaotic nature of teenager life and the realization that life must go on.

Simon & Schuster Books for Young Readers

Reading Level: 5  Interest Level: 7-12  Classification: Fiction

Two brothers, fifteen-year-old Justin and twelve-year-old Mark, commiserate over and disregard their mother's household rules. Having street shoes on the new, beige sofa quickly yields to breaking into their parents' bedroom with a screwdriver to watch a television that ISN'T locked in a strong, sturdy cabinet. A brotherly tussle intensifies, a silly challenge is made while wielding their parents' hidden gun, a gun shot...

A year later, surviving brother Justin practices not swallowing his medications and talks to a voice which he hears "in his head." His mother has become disinterested; his father hopes he doesn't cause any trouble. Justin is prodded by and challenges the voice.

Tired of the sameness in his life and hating the constant badgering he takes at school, Justin endures taunts from his former best-friend Billy, insults from his former girlfriend Megan, and blame from school administrators. He begins hallucinating, is squirted with ketchup in the school cafeteria, and is attacked by Billy.

Later, a fight leaves Billy bleeding at the bottom of a stairway, Justin swallowing a bottleful of his mother's prescription, passing out and dreaming about his brother's death, and then waking up to the same sequence of events, slightly different this time, and the voice.

Echo is told at a break-neck pace, rapidly unfolding (most events occur on a single, repeating day) complete with a devastating tie-in to Macbeth, foreshadowing, and themes of forgiveness, memory, and healing. Most importantly, while the reader is constantly reassessing feelings toward Justin, the novel leaves one with a tremendous sense of hope.

This powerful story can also be used to teach about our country’s turbulent times leading up to the Civil War. The cruel event of Lizzy being hired out to a slave breaker and beaten is one example of the injustices of slavery. Mary painting flowers on her family’s fence so runaway slaves knew it was a place to rest and eat before continuing on in their escape to the North demonstrates her courage in stating her feelings about slavery. Another aspect for educating students on this time in history is the vocabulary used—it is especially rich in the dialect of the period. Ideal for any time during the school year, but especially a good book club choice in February for National Black History Month and Presidents’ Day, this book provides an entirely new perspective for both celebrations.

An Unlikely Friendship: A Novel Of Mary Todd Lincoln And Elizabeth Keckley

By Ann Rinaldi

010875  $17.86
Harcourt

Reading Level: 5  Interest Level: 5-9  Classification: Fiction

Ann Rinaldi, queen of young adult American historical fiction, has written a remarkable tale of two very “unlikely” friends: Mary Todd Lincoln, wife of our country’s 16th president and Elizabeth Keckley, her seamstress during the White House years and freed slave.

The stage is set as the author describes that fateful day when President Lincoln was shot—April 14, 1865. A distraught Mrs. Lincoln tells her son Robert, “Go and get my friend Elizabeth Keckley; she is the only one who understands me.”

So, how did these two women who grew up in totally different cultural backgrounds become such close friends for life? Rinaldi believes the answer lies in their childhoods and weaves together two tales of loss, tragedy, pain and sometimes horrific events, as in Elizabeth’s childhood. The reader is left amazed at their strength and determination to survive.

Contemporary young adult readers can identify with the lives of Mary and Lizzy, as they also deal with loss, feeling left out, grief, step families, and setting goals to better themselves. Using these courageous women as examples, this story teaches the reader about a variety of character traits for your character education program: courage, determination, initiative, perseverance, and responsibility.
